Ylang Ylang
Cananga odorata

It only takes a little... apply to the skin...and can relieve anger and frustration...

The tall (65ft.) Ylang Ylang tree originated in the Philippines, but is now grown throughout tropical Asia for the perfume trade and even used as a flavoring in beverages and desserts. The name, meaning “flower of flowers,” describes the sweet, yellow blooms, which produce the essential oil. The scent is intensely sweet, heady, floral, and slightly spicy, with overtone of narcissus or banana. Many people prefer to blend this with other oils to mellow its intensity. Blends well with Lemon, Bergamot, Geranium, Grapefruit, Marjoram, Sandalwood and Vetiver.

Antidepressant, antidiabetic, anti-infectious, anti-inflammatory, anti-parasitic, antispasmodic, antiseptic, aphrodisiac, hypotensive, sedative, relieves sexual anxiety and enhances relationships. It may help stimulate adrenal glands.

Often relieves depression, frigidity, hypertension, impotence, insomnia, mental fatigue, nervous tension, palpitations, respiration stress, shock, skin rashes and indecisiveness.

Ylang Ylang oil soothes and inhibits anger born of frustration. Psychologically, Ylang Ylang calms, uplifts, creates a sense of peace and aids self-expression of repressed inner feelings. It minimizes aggressive behavior, anger, rage, and fear, while fostering feelings of confidence, love, security, and serenity. It stimulates enthusiasm and can provide comfort during times of change. Ylang Ylang oil encourages positive emotions and feelings and helps to improve harmony and confidence. It awakens an appreciation of self and others, as well as of the beauty of life. It helps individuals attract and recognize enjoyable experiences and pleasure in everyday life. It inspires creativity, intuition, and understanding, and helps both men and women to enjoy their feminine qualities.

Early in the 20th Century the French chemists Garnier and Rechler discovered the effectiveness of Ylang Ylang against Malaria, Typhus and infections of the intestinal tract. They also noted its calming and balancing action on the heart. Relief from severe nervous tension effects like palpitations, hypertension and tachycardia (rapid heartbeat) was reported then and now.

Because it eases muscle spasms and relaxes tense muscles, Ylang Ylang provides relief from backache, sciatica, and TMJ syndrome. The effect on the nervous system is euphoric, sedative, and hypotensive. It is indicated in states of anxiety, tension, and high blood pressure. As well as reducing high blood pressure, Ylang Ylang relieves tachycardia (abnormally fast heart-beat) and hyperpnoea (abnormally fast breathing). Can help in treating female disorders such as irregular periods, menstrual cramps, and premenstrual syndrome (PMS). Ylang Ylang can be very calming and comforting to women going through menopause. It also soothes the inflammation and irritation of psoriasis, eczema and other types of dermatitis.

Ylang Ylang is a skin treatment for oily skin types, by balancing oil production and reduces excessive oiliness, insect bites, and in hair treatments to promote thick, shiny, lustrous hair (also reported to help control split ends). It has been successfully used to treat colic, constipation, indigestion, stomachaches and hiccups.

No Skin irritation or discomfort, non-toxic; use a little and then add more if needed.
